Getting Ready to Help

We've just started a new charitable movement! It supports a great cause and we hope you'll get involved.

Most of us don't stop to think about how expensive attending to our gender's biology can be. Many women in the United States don't have enough money each month to purchase basic feminine hygiene products like sanitary napkins and tampons. So they have to either improvise when they need these products, or they have to hibernate. In other words many women miss one or more days of school and work each month because they don't have the products they need to go out in public during their periods.

Imagine how you would feel if you were trapped in this situation.

It's crazy when you think of it, especially because most of us probably never think of it. And it would really be so simple to help get these products into the hands of those in need. So we've decided to get things rolling by hosting a collection drive for feminine hygiene products and then donating them to The Salvation Army of Atlanta's Women's Shelters.

But we aren't stopping there! Once we have a successful drive under our belts we plan to spread the word to others about how easy it is to have one drive and help needy women out. In other words, we'd like to keep it flowing! Watch this site for more information about our new charitable movement called "Thinking of Her," and get ready to open your hearts and help out.
